00:00:00.00 Northerly flow pattern will also set up tonight and again Friday night across Santa Barbara county and the interstate 5 corridor generated from gusty winds in those areas, hot and dry conditions will continue the next few days. Widespread triple digit temperatures are expected today through Saturday with hottest inland locations ranging between 105 and 110 degrees even many coastal locations will soar into the 90's during the next couple of days with isolated triple digit readings. Break.

00:00:00.00 Widespread single digit humidity's are expected to continue through at least Friday. The mountains, and adjacent foothills will likely continue with the longest durations of single digit humidity's with many locations exceeding critical ten hour durations each day along with very poor recoveries at night. Periods of single digit humidity's are also expected for portions of the coasts, and valleys in the next two days, but it is generally not expected to exceed critical ten hour durations required for red flag warnings. The combination of long duration single digit humidity's, hot temperatures, and critically dry fuels have prompted, prompt this red flag warning. Hot, and dry conditions are expected to persist on Saturday with possible extension of red flag warnings necessary. A cooling front is expected Sunday into Monday. Break.

00:00:00.00 All stations fire weather forecast for Thursday, August 27th. Dispatch area discussion. Red flag warning in effect until nine pm Friday for the mountains and adjacent foothills of Los Angeles, Ventura, Santa Barbara, and San Luis Obispo Counties due to low humidity's and hot temperatures. The strong level of high pressure system will remain anchored over southern California through Saturday. Near the surface the flow will remain weakly off shore in the morning hours, turning weakly on shores in the afternoon hours. A northern flow pattern will set up again tonight and Friday night across Santa Barbara County and the interstate five corridor generating some gusty winds in those areas. Hot and dry conditions will continue the next few days. Widespread triple digit temperatures are expected today through Saturday with the hottest in locations ranging between 105 and 110 degrees. Some costal locations will soar over 100 degrees on Friday. Break.

00:00:00.00 Continuing. Widespread single digit humidity's are expected to continue through at least through Friday. The mountains and adjacent foothills will continue with the longest duration of single digit humidity's with many locations exceeding critical ten hour durations each day along with very poor recoveries at night. Periods of single digit humidity's are also expected for portions of the coast and valleys for the next few days. Generally not expected to exceed critical ten hour durations required for red flag warnings. The combination of long duration single digit humidity's, hot temperatures and critically dry fuel are prompted for the red flag warning. Hot and dry conditions are expected to persist on Saturday with possible extension of red flag warnings in the mountains. A cooling trend is expected during the extended period. Break.
