

Another explanation for ring rots in pine and related genera is that some of the decay fungi, such as Fomes pini, first get established in the center of the trunk through branch infections. After establishment, new columns of decay form at the boundaries of the sapwood and heartwood. The new columns are compartmentalized and appear as rings.

